

Sarah Woodcock

Chief Executive Officer
The Anti-Slavery Collective

Sarah has worked in leadership roles supporting CSOs, Governments, and businesses to develop innovative, impact-driven strategies and programmes across Asia, Europe, and North America. Now based in London, Sarah is the CEO of The Anti Slavery Collective (TASC), a human rights organisation laser-focused on keeping modern slavery and human trafficking on the agenda.

Sarah has a particular interest in the measurement of impact and the transformative power of data in solving complex development challenges. She has worked with teams from 40+ countries during her career building public / private partnerships that deliver long-term sustainable results. She holds a Masters degree from SOAS, University of London in human rights law and the political economy of development.
